This screenshot shows a complex grid of course selection options. The interface is heavily stylized with a dark background and bright, multi-colored elements (red, green, blue, yellow). The grid contains numerous small icons, text labels, and buttons, likely representing different course categories or selection statuses. The layout is dense and appears to be a user interface for navigating through a list of available courses.

This screenshot shows a course selection interface with a white background. At the top, there is a navigation bar with the text "选课学分情况" and "公选课选课". Below this, a table lists course details. A red box highlights a specific area in the table, and a red arrow points from this box to a button labeled "选课". The table contains columns for course ID, name, credits, instructor, schedule, location, and seats. The course listed is "哲学、教育、人生" (Philosophy, Education, Life) with 2 credits, taught by "高飞" (Gao Fei) on Tuesdays from 9-10 AM in room A106 of the West Campus, with 80 seats available.

The main content area features a large, vibrant image of a modern building complex, likely a library or academic building, with a blue and green color scheme. Below the image, there is a sidebar on the right containing several navigation icons and text links. The overall layout is clean and professional, typical of a university website.
